

BOYS OF THE BULLDOG BREED - - The introduction of recruits to naval routine filmed for the first time, at Portsmouth Naval Barracks.

-By permission of the Admiralty- Hampshire.

Picture.:- The rolling sea has no terror for this fellow.

He has just joined the Navy, and is getting his issue of tailor-mades.

He's passed O.K. fore and aft, and can now boast--
--that his clothes are made by the tailors of His Majesty the King. The recruits name must be on every article, if he wants to keep the said article. Slingshammocks is a very essential craft.

All bright and early in the morning the Commander inspects the recruits' parade. Do they look like recruits? - - They do! After a couple of weeks--

--rifles are issued, and the men begin to settle down to the job.

During their service all men of the Royal Navy are taught a trade to follow after their discharge.

Here are some learning shoe-making. This scheme covers a wide--

--range of crafts, and enables the man to leave the service with a civilian job--

--at his finger tips. Many master-carpenters have gained their skill in naval workshops while serving the-- --King. Ah! A popular feature of the day's routine.

The rum issue. Notice that the cask ever reminds them of the best and most--

--loyal toast in peace, or war, "God bless the King".
