A RISKY BUSINESS -- New Zealand fishermen risk life and limb to land sharks alive as aquarium exhibits.

Looking down into a shark's mouth may give pleasure to some people, but my-- --idea of hot lips is different. New Zealand fishermen catch these fellows--

--and sell them to Museums and Aquaria. The sea beasts are real man-eaters. One bite, and there's a notice in the local--

--obituary column. If you can get them by-- --the tail before they spot you and hold it just above water, they're practically helpless. If you don't believe me, try it for-- --yourself. These expert New Zealanders can hold one in each hand without much trouble. Before you try it however, make sure which end is the tail.

Mistakes are difficult to rectify. As I said, all they want, is just one bite !
