Kelvin Hall, Glasgow, sees a great gathering of ten--

--thousand Boy Scouts. Everyone complete with kilt.
The reason for all this is a big--

--one. The Prince of Wales, who is Chief Scout of Wales, is due to inspect--

--the Scottish scouts and their show in their exhibition--

--hall. The Prince is also in scout uniform, wearing a-- --kilt of his own tartan as--

--the Duke of Rothesay. His Royal Highness then--

--takes a place by Sir David MacKowan who is-- --presiding over the opening ceremony. Among the many exhibits, an excellent model ship attracts the boys, and later the Prince himself mingles-- --with the crowd watching it. This exhibition is an ambitious scout effort. Sealed with the Prince's approval, it should start a new 'boom' in scout recruiting.
