FOOTBALL AT CRAVEN COTTAGE.

Picture.:-

Thousands of football fans foregather at Craven Cottage--

--to find out if Austria really knows how to play football. The visitors are matched against Fulham, and the said football fans, haven't--

--long to wait before they discover that--

--the Viennese can play fast energetic footer almost as well as they--

--can play slow passionate waltzes. Fulham attacks immediately after Austria's kick-off, but the clever team work on the part of the visitors stops their effort before much damage is done.

Fulham has had luck by losing Newton their centre forward through a fractured right knee. An The accident which will--

--probably put him out of action for a month or two. The incident was not the result of rough play. The relations between the sides being very sporting. The Austrians--

--well ordered compact play, accurate--

--passing and sound defence frequently draw approval from--

--the crowd, and they nett the first goal.

They seem to--

--deserve the label given them by authority as the most scientific football team on the continent. A fine--

--run up by their outside---

--right is stopped by--

--Bassett, and a return attack gives Hammond a chance to score within six minutes of full time, when the light is fading badly, and to end an excellent game in a draw.
