

WITH THE SAARMY.
CAMERAMEN ACCOMPANY THE TROOPS.

Picture.:- The Saar question still holds first place in the news. The--

--troops are off to hold the Saar, but the cigarette--

--issue holds the troops' chief interest at the moment.

And polishing their buttons. No, that's not interest.

It's spit and polish work.

A last look at Dover's receding cliffs at sunset, and we--

--jump to see the troops arrive--

--at Saarbrucken. (The English would be Saar Bridge) (PAUSE).

General Brind, British Commander-in-Chief, and other officers keep a watchful eye--

--on the operation of debouching from the train,

--and the Saar crowds keep--

--a watchful eye on them. The German Chief--

--of Saar Police, with Captain Henessy, new British chief also takes--

--a look, directing--

--civil operations, and after all--

--that the men march out to--

--find their billets. The attitude of the-- --inhabitants may be described--

--as passive. No cheers, no groans, no demonstrations of any kind, greet the men as they--

--march along the streets of the town between lines of

Saar Police. Nazi flags are--

--still flying as they pass, but this is the Swastika's last appearance until the Pbeliscite. All will be withdrawn to-night by order--

--of the Commission. Meanwhile the cameramen keep on turning.(PAUSE)

Picture. :- The Italians arrive the next. Their smart new--

--uniforms make rather a continental contrast with the loose-fitting war service kit--

--of the British troops. Still no demonstration from the inhabitants. It's fairly plain that most look upon all this military display--

--as something entirely apart from them. The Fascist--

--salute is given by the Italian--

--Commander-in-Chief. (PAUSE).

Packed machine guns give a distinct suggestion--

--of no nonsense. (PAUSE).

The liner 'NEW YORK' berths. (EFFECTS).

This ship is landing four-hundred American--

--Germans who have travelled -

--across the Atlantic to vote for their--

--country's future. Girls greet them with bouquets. The first--

--suggestion of real welcome I have seen. Nothing lukewarm about it!

A shot or two of the Lancashires--

--at work. Drill parades are held within sight of the important Saar coal--

--mines, without which said mines, it is doubtful if anybody would--

--bother much about the Saar--

--at all. (EFFECTS).

Look at the interest shown by those--

--onlookers. I think the best spirit is shown by Snoner the drummer boy.
