

INTERNATIONAL RUGBY.

ENGLAND V WALES.

The high light of the ball game events. England versus Wales at Twickenham. The afternoon is very dark and the brightest light up to the moment was when the-----

-----Duke of Kent revealed himself, shook hands with the player and caused a cheer which nearly lifted the roof off the stands

----- England is playing with lots of dash and the about seventy thousand spectators are, as usual, very-----

-----rapt in the game, and in warm overcoats. The crush-----

-----is so great that hundreds of them have been allowed to sit on the grass in----- --- front of the barriers. In fact, they're nearly sitting on--

-----the touch line in places. In spite of England's fierce attempt to break through, the Welsh defenders have kept the enemy out. In fact they drew first blood. Woollier gave Cliff Jones great chance which Jones took with both hands, and chalked up a try for the land of----- ---the leak. W.C. Powell has done and is doing excellent work for his pack-----

-----a tremendous number of-----

-----red berets make the dark mass of ----- -----the crowd look as if----- -----it was suffering from some other fever than just rugby. Bassett had a marvellous run up just now, after getting a pass from Davey, but was----- brought down by Cramner. Another exciting incident was when Jenkins had a shot a penalty from a distance---

--- of forty five yards and only just missed. Anyway, the battle ended in nobody's favour; the teams drew, three-three.
