RUGBY AT TWICKENHAM.

ENGLAND V IRELAND.

---

For the fifty fourth time Ireland takes the field----

---against England, and its a wonderful day for it. ----

---Ireland kickes off. Bailey takes it. Ireland gets the ball from a scrumage. Some brilliant passing by England and Booth gets through, loses it, but Giles scores a try-----

-----Boughton's kick is not so easy but he converts and England is-----

---- five points up in as----

--many minutes. Most of the game was in the English---

---half but Ireland is----

-----the victim of a number of misfortunes - to put it kindly. Both sides are doing a fair amount of long kicking, which makes a ----

---lot of running about and doesn't alter the score. Ireland attacks brilliantly; Russell breaks through; a liberty by an English player spoils it -----

--Ireland gets a penalty kick---

-----Ridgway takes it. A fine kick but it goes wide of---

---the post. Boughton kicks---

---with his left foot and gnaw the ball. Irelands backs are no shining very brightly I'm afraid. The game is not high international standard; Giles, for England, is playing a---

--magnificent game and Payne, giving his international cap its first outing, proves that his supporters choice was a good one. Ireland is putting up a ----

-----fine battle but England's ----

---superiority holds them when they begin to get dangerous. Suggins passes to O'Connor, who flies down the wing and puts Ireland two points up, but---

--Boughtons tree goals make it fourteen points for three in

England's favour.
