H.M.S. HOOD IN DRY DOCK.

FOR REPAIRS.

Picture.

H.M.S. HOOD, sea giant now high and
--dry in dock at Portsmouth, in collision with--
--the Renown one propeller became--
--imbedded in the hull of the colliding ship.

Many of the steel plates forming--
--her massive starboard quarter were damaged.

These are now being removed. The work has provided jobs--

--for every unemployed shipwright in Portsmouth.
Welding by acetone and electric power--

--gave us some shots which--

--look rather like Blackpool on a gala night.

On the ship the routine goes on as--
--usual. Even in dry-dock the jolly old navy--
--never sleeps, and the jolly old ratings murmur curses because of same.
