BUDGET DAY.

CHANCELLOR GOES TO "THE HOUSE".

Picture.:-

The gentlemen of the press line up--
--for pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Neville Chamberlain. This is--
--the Chancellor's great day. The Chancellor smiles. Whether--
--he will succeed in--
--making John Citizen smile is another matter. The secret--
--of the little black bag will soon--
--be out, and if we don't smile, I suppose--
--we shall grin and bear it. Mr.--
--Chamberlain's neighbours are interested, too.

And as for the pressmen, well, if they don't secure good pictures, they won't have any Income Tax to pay anyway. Most of them took steps to prevent failure. They now return them to their surprised owners. While the Chancellor drives along--
--to the House, watched by a squad of-- --Scotland Yard detectives. And is the Budget a--
--good one, or a bad one? You know all about it--
--by this time. Lord--
--Blueblanket's press says it's just terrible. But Lord--
--Booster's papers say it's marvellous. Pick where you like!
