ROYAL VISIT TO EDINBURGH.
DUKE AND DUCHESS OF KENT.

---

Picture.:-

Another of the numerous engagements fulfilled by Their Royal Highnesses The Duke and Duchess of Kent in Edinburgh. At the Royal Edinburgh Infirmary, the Duke lays--

--the foundation stone of the new maternity wing, and--

--it goes down very well. These nurses are--

--rather excited, because quite a number of them have won prizes for progress, or good conduct, well, both I hope, and they're going-- --to receive them from the-- --Duke's hands. An honour which should make ward conversation for years. On the-- --platform, by the side of the Duchess, is Mr. Ramsay Maedonald, who is very--

--interested in this wonderful half-a-million pound Scottish Hospital. What with patients, and staff, the hospital roof covers some two-thousand people, and it produces a few additions to itself and the general population every day.

All prize winning nurses have to be good at counting.
