

DUCHESS OF YORK AT BARKINGSIDE.

DR. BARNARDO'S FOUNDERS DAY CELEBRATIONS.

Picture.:-

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of York pays a visit to Dr. Barnardo's Homes--

--at Barkingside. Hundreds of the little orphan--

--kiddies cheer the smiling--

--Royal Lady as she progresses to present Founder's Day prizes at the--

--Girls Village--

--Home. Some of the wee tots are rather overawed, particularly the lad who has the honour of presenting the Duchess with her bouquet, which he nearly doesn't.

This Founders Day is set apart annually in recognition of--

--the great and--

--wise quality shown by Doctor Barnardo. In his lifetime he devoted--

--himself to this work of child rescue.

The organisation is now--

--his living memorial, through which many thousand of once destitute--

--children have become useful and occasionally brilliant citizens.

But 48-hours afterwards, The Duchess undertakes an engagement, with a different kind of thrill. With the Duke she arrives at Hendon Aerodrome to make her first journey by air. Dressed in a blue and white loose fitting ensemble, with a shady white hat, the Duchess appears to be looking forward to this new experience. To the Duke, it is, of course--

--just routine. He is--

--already a seasoned airman. The Royal Couple are crossing to Brussels. During their visit they will attend an Embassy Banquet, and a royal ball, given in the British Pavilion of the International Exhibition to celebrate the Exhibition's British Week.
