

DUKE OF YORK IN CAMP.

HAPPY DAY WITH BOYS.

Picture.:- The Duke of York goes to his Camp. At Southwold two-hundred boys from various Public Schools become co-campers with two-hundred boys from various industrial concerns. And with, and among them, is the Duke. A princely comrade of all. Sports are indulged in largely, and when His Royal Highness sees preparations being made for a land boat race, he becomes a royal, though temporary, colleague of our news-reel operators. From them he receives and absorbs sufficient knowledge of the sine apparatus to focus, switch in the camera, and shoot these scenes. A highly technical job, which as you see, was carried through with complete success.

The Duke himself does as the rest, sleeps under canvas, rises at 7.a.m, and takes part in the normal camp day's routine. And if that's not practical princely democracy, well, show me ! - - -
