KIDDIES' ZOO.

LONDON NOVELTY.

Picture.

Peter The Chimp and Dr. Julian Huxley open the Zoo's new addition, the 'Pet's Corner'. Peter is very pleased about it, but Donald Rollman is disgusted at this blatant exploitation of their private lives.

The 'Pet's Corner' is a playground where children may ride a camel, or a giant tortoise, (I say ! I hope that child can read !)

play with lion cubs, or guinea pigs. Here's a mush over-ridden mount, whose jockeys sit all over him.

Humpy Herace the Dismal Dromedary.

Penguins may be taken for a walk. They are very like our late lamented Unele Podger. The back view is very reminiscent, and he opens his mouth exactly like poor Unele Podger did before he died of over-eating. Oh ! Lucky Chimp ! If we could only do that sometimes ! A snatch in time saves - - - Here's a yak being fed ! While the bear calls for the empties.

The good-looks of the apes attract many Juliets, and to play with the lion-cubs is, of course a thrill not to be missed. But despite that, it is the chimps which give the most spine-tickling thrills ! They have got the human touch, and so I kiss your hand, Madam ! Always the perfect gentleman ! Well, nearly always ! Watched by jealous rivals, Peter the Chimp is taught thesee-saw game, and soon can do it himself. The Zoo's tremendous fun nowadays. Why wasn't I born young ?
