Boys of the Blue Coat School visit London to attend the annual St. Mathew's Day Service. All this is in accordance with the ancient traditions laid down at the founding of this famous school. The original establishment at Newgate was created by King Edward the VI as a Charity School. Christ's Hospital, as the college is called, is now embodied in an imposing building at Horsham. The annual service at the old Church in Newgate, which the Lord Mayor attends, keeps bright, the School's historic link with the City.
