Major Fey, late leader of the Austrian Heimwehr, gives his last speech before being superseded by Prince Starhemberg.

A torchlight procession through the streets of Vienna celebrates Europe's latest bloodless revolution.

Dr. Schusehnigg, Prince Starhemberg, and members of the new Austrian Cabinet acknowledge the Heimwehr salute. This political revolution has removed from the government ranks those who were against full and complete agreement with Italy, and also those who favoured the restoration of the Austrian Monarchy.

Prince Starhemberg is a great admirer of Mussolini, and has taken a leading part in this Nazi coup which is reported to make Dr. Schusehnigg, the Chancellor, a lay figure who willy-nilly must dance to the Prince's piping.
