BATTLE OF
EDINBURGH.
RECTORIAL CLASH.

Picture.:-

War starts in Edinburgh. Opposing political factions of the University Rectorial Election, prepare to meet in bluggy combat. Ammunition is piled up, the zero hour has arrived. Everybody takes a deep breath, and goes over the top. The first decisive action is the battle of the balustrade.

The supporters of Dr. Chalmers Watson lead off with a barrage of squidgy tomatoes, and smelly sods heads. The Viscount Allenby faction adopts dirty tactics which include a sack of awfully sooty soot. Meanwhile the balustrade is being held by the Allenby corps. Three to one is offered as the result of this private scrap. Girl students itch to join in, but one male has already been stripped of his reputation, and another has lost his mittens so the girls just remain on the sheltered side of their two-piece suits. If these captors don't soon decide which way to take their prisoner, they will split the difference and take half each. If it matters, Viscount Allenby is elected as new Lord Rector.
