Picture.:- At Addis Ababa the Emperor of Abyssinia is on parade, to present new colours to the new Imperial Guard. His Majesty is mounted on a superb Arab charger, until, of course, he dismounts to present the new Colours.

The 12-years-old Duke of Harrar, favourite son of the Emperor, is present at this ceremony.

Singly the Guard swears allegiance to their trust of guarding their ruler.

Not quite like our Life Guards,- but their hearts are willing.

Thereafter comes an imposing march-past of the said new Guard. In all about ten-thousand men, but we won't wait for the lot. There isn't enough film. Instead we will pass to another royal occasion. The young Prince visits the Ethiopian Military School and reviews activities of cadets in training for rifle practice and various other exercises necessary to train soldiers. The School is supervised by Swedish military officers, under whom all instruction is carried out. If you can't believe all you read about the war-fronts, you can't disbelieve all this. The camera can't lie. At least, not the news camera !
