Das Wetter ist ~~xxx~~ sehr schlecht, aber andere alles in --- ---garten ist wunderbar. In other words----
---Germans, Germans everywhere. Rain is running down---- ---the gutters and lager is running ---- ---down the gutturals. A police----
----van bawls out instructions in German directing a crowd of --- ---ten thousand German visitors where to ---- ---go and how to get there. Leicester Square isn't a ----- ---bit like itself until the pack at---- ---last gets to Tottenham, where the much-advertised International---Footer match between Germany and ---
---England is to take place, weather and other things permitting.
The teams come----
---out. Each player, with his opposite--- ---number. Germany white, England blue shirts. Hapgood wins the toss. The excitement is terrific.
----But great good humour---- --prevails. Hohman kicks off for Germany and the game is on.
The ten thousand German supporters packed in the stands appear to----be rather more reserved than our Cup-tie fans but still theres plenty of noise-----
---and some flag-wagging. A number of people first thought the--- ---flags had a political flavour, but they were merely Club--- -- bunting. In any case, the game takes first thought with the sporting British -----

---people. the German footwork is very good and ----- ---the side is well knit----- ---by-- you cant do that there 'ere----- ---Jakob, their goalkeeper made---- ---some very excellent saves. By half time England had managed--- ---to score only one goal out of many chances. Our ---- football was not brilliant and the visitors' ---- ---bated our defences many times. In fact they played a ---- ---fine game, but failed when in front of the goal. ----
 ---It was one of the cleanest games I have ever ---- seen, but Germany was beaten by three goals to nil----
 ---and so to keep the atmosphere " Auf wiedersehen, meine damen Herren".
