(PAUSE).

Hairn, for Dartmouth, takes the ball and ducks round Princeton's left. Heads for a touch-down - - and nearly scores, but is pulled down instead.

Meanwhile the snow is taking a hand. The ground is getting covered, and the lines are gradually disappearing.

Play will soon be by guess work. (EFFECTS)

And it snows worsen nor-ever ! Here's a great piece of play ! A Princeton man steps out bravely for a score, and then takes a seat.

The crowd doesn't mind. It's warmer standing up on a day like this. If the players would only get their hockey sticks and snow shoes, it would be a great game ! (PAUSE). Oh look ! Here's an over exuberant spectator gone on to show them how to make a snow-man, or play good rucker. The ground police save him from the Tigers. He's very dis-satisfied about the whole thing. He will probably claim his money back. But going back to the snow, the teams keep going until Princeton wins, and the crowd starts tearing things up and down.

Well, it was a marvellous snow-storm.
