Picture.:- From now on fencers need not disagree any more than is necessary for the fight. A gadget has been invented which electrically records each hit.

The foils are connected by loose wires to the apparatus and as the point of the foil touches any part of the opponent, a bell rings, registering which fencer hits which and where. Of course, if fencing guards are pierced, and a man is properly pinked and laid out, the bell isn't necessary, and the invention is wasted. All that is required in that case is a doctor and ambulance.

Picture. :- The School-Boys' Exhibition is just full of gadgets. Youngsters can even see a periodical printed, but the most popular attractions are ships and trains. An old galleon contrasts strangely with His Majesty's ship

'Ajax', in model. Miniature aeroplanes run trains closely in popularity, but even yet, watching the trains go by still holds its own until the lads grow up and get other ideas.

of France this suspension bridge was blown down right on top of a barge which collapsed while the barge-owner's family were at dinner, and what the bargee said shocked even his wife, who thought she had
