RUGBY AT TWICKENHAM

ENGLAND v. ALL BLACKS.

Picture.:- The Prince of Wales the the Crown Prince of Egypt are two Royal Spectators among 7500 people who see England come out at Twickenham to meet the New Zealand All Blacks. The respective Captains are B.C. Gadney and J.E. Manchester.

England kicks off. Gerrard taking it, and there they are off. England starts a strong attack but they soon get baulked, the

All Blacks forcing the play back to England's 25 yard line. Right from the beginning of the match it is obvious that the fastest man on the field is the Russian player Prince Oblensky. Neither side seems to get much advantage from the scrums. General weight and tactics appear to cancel out. But there is Oblensky making a magnificent run. He is cutting through and has scored. E.

Dunkley takes the kick and fails to convert.

There is now no doubt that England has got the pace of the New Zealanders beaten, and if there is any betting it should be odds against the All Blacks. Oblensky's remarkable speed seems to have gingered up the whole English side. Candler has passed to Oblensky. He's on his way again, crosses to the unexpected side of the field, and again scores.

Gerrard again takes the kick and again

fails to convert. Now to jump th the end of the story, England has gained an outstanding victory by thirteen points to nil.

Prince Oblensky played like three men, and that certainly had quite a lot to do with it.
