ENGLAND v. WALES

RUGBY AT SWANSEA.

Fifteen of England's best Rugby players, not of course excepting the flying Prince Oblensky have come to Swansea to meet fifteen of Wales' best, and of those Cliff Jones at outside-half is by no means least.

The snow holds off, which is lucky for the enormous crowd. Looks like a record pack for the ground.

From the word, or rather whistle, go, it is obvious that the teams are remarkably well matched. Wales seems to be a little the better side in the scrums. Wooler of Wales is doing good work., oh very good.

And Cliff Jones has given spectacular evidence of his turn of speed. In fact, he has kept Wales out of trouble more than once. Cramer and Sever have done the same for England, although Cramer failed at a penalty goal. Near scoring, but no scoring has been the order of the match. Each side batters away but the defence strengths are so equal that the battle ends in no score for either side.
