

Here at London Airport is the first private British trade delegation to visit Russia since the war; and they've come back, ~~tired~~ tired from hard bargaining --- but ^{with} order books filled to the tune of sixteen million pounds. And since in these days we are always up to our necks in politics, it is refreshing to hear from one delegate.

SKI-ING FOR DISABLED.

Ski-ing is always looked upon as a sport exclusively for the very fit. So it's real news when on the Hirschkogel in Austria, they hold a slalom championship for the disabled. One class winner, even overcame the handicap of two artificial legs. And the winner of the prize for the best technical performance was Bruno Wintersteller --- with crutches instead of ski-sticks.

SKI-JUMPING.

Spectators were jumping as well as competitors, at the ski-jumping championships near Stockholm in Sweden. The temperature was twenty-five degrees below zero. A surprise came up when the Norwegian ace Falkanger was beaten by a young newcomer from Finland; but the crowd came third in a photo-finish.

BOBSLED BEGINNERS.

There's a winter sports meeting also at Lake Placid; the bobsled aces riding the hard snow in the National Championships.

And here, there's also a school for the new generation; it's a smaller course, built specially for boys up to twelve; but they keep on changing the shape of the course with their heads.

MISS PRESS PHOTOGRAPHER.

To win the title of "Miss Press Photographer", a girl had to be in pretty good shape; and the 1954 selection was guaranteed to cause steam on your glasses. The winner was eighteen-year-old Jackie Hansen, and needless to say it made her the happiest girl in the world. Afterwards, Miss Hansen cheered up and photographed the judges. To a winner, even a judge looks beautiful.
