

Susan Shentall caused a sensation when she was picked to play the part of Juliet in the new Anglo-Italian film of "Romeo and Juliet," although she had never acted before. So it's news when --- at the village church of Old Brampton in Derbyshire --- Susan gets married in real life. The bridegroom is Mr Philip Worthington. They first met when holiday making in Devon with their respective parents..... and fortunately there was no Montagu-Capulet feud ~~xxx~~ to overcome. But no doubt a line from the play occurred to the bride, as she cut the wedding cake: 'Tis not so deep as a well nor so wide as a church door, but 'tis enough."

WOMEN'S HOME GUARD.

In Manjor, a ~~re-settled~~ <sup>have</sup> re-settled village in a district of Malaya where terrorists ~~had~~ been specially active, twelve women volunteered to have military training and join the Home Guard. Thus - all the men are now able to concentrate on daytime work in the plantations --- while the Women's Home Guard stands guard

--- With constant practice --- they're turning into crack shots.

CHIMP SHOW.

In the St Louis Zoo --- that was quick --- our best-looking cameraman set out to take a few shots of the social whirl.

And it turned out that this was the day the Professor was giving a high-class concert to a high-toned audience. That's right --- put it where <sup>they can't</sup> ~~the screen~~ pinch it.

And when he sat down to play --- it was just like toothache.
