

D-DAY PARADE IN LONDON.

8/6/54.

Members of the British Legion attended a Memorial Parade at the Cenotaph in London on the anniversary of D-Day..... and ~~xxxxxxx~~ a wreath in homage to those who gave their lives was laid at the foot of the National Shrine by Sir Ian Fraser.

The service was conducted by the Dean of Westminster; and bands and drummers of Guards Battalions, paid their tributes to old comrades of ten years ago.

Then --- with Standards at the "Carry--- Colours Flying" --- the parade marched past.

On this same day --- the anniversary of that June day of 1944 when the mightiest invasion of all time was begun --- memories were stirred on the beaches of Normandy, and in the little towns and villages of France. High-ranking officers --- and the rank-and-file --- and French civilians -- joined in the public acts of remembrance, and re-lived in memory those desperate, glorious hours. The beginning of the end of Hitler's War of Aggression; when so many died --- that so many more might live.
