

It's winter on the other side of the world --- and here's the Australian International Rugby League Team, in dark jerseys, meeting the England team in Sydney. And this is Australia's Duncan Hall crashing through the England defence, to pass to Provan for Australia's first try. But the English team went into the lead when mighty Silcock scored. The question then was : Had Australia bitten off more than they could chew? The second half showed that the answer was "No." Up to twelve points all it was level pegging, then the first Test, ended with victory for Australia.

FLYING ANGELS.

In the town of Campebasso, in Italy, a procession is held every year on the day of Corpus Christi. And children, play the part of angels. For the benefit of parents who don't believe it's possible --- this is <sup>how</sup> ~~how~~ it's done.

AQUASHOW.

One of the snags of <sup>log-</sup> ~~of~~ reeling is that it's easy to start --- but how do you stop?

That's how! This was the Aquashow at New York's Flushing Meadow Park; complete with clowns.

MISS CALIFORNIA.

All the beautiful girls of the Golden State, turned up for the annual competition to select "Miss California". This year the contest was at sunny Santa Cruz. The winner was a girl from San Francisco --- nineteen-year-old Miss Ann Merriwether. We're hoping that she'll now <sup>visit</sup> ~~come over to~~ England to compete with the British champion --- Miss Cloudburst.

OXFORD DEGREES.

At Oxford University, Honorary doctorates were conferred upon several distinguished men and women from different walks of life. They included Britain's Ambassador to France, Sir Gladwyn Jebb; and the famous actress Dame Edith Evans. A visitor from ~~xxxxxxx~~ the Continent to receive this honour, was the former President of France, M. Vincent Auriol. The ceremony took place in the Sheldonian Theatre.
