

On Sydney Cricket Ground, in the depths of Australian winter, sixty eight thousand fans saw the Aussies kick off in the final Test match for the Ashes of the Rugby League. And the home side showed they meant business with some hard tackling.

Here's a scrum where England came out best --- Jackson handed off a tackle and passed out to the wing.

O'Grady on the wing passed ~~xxx~~ to Ashcroft --- and that was the first try for England.

Australia replied when Wells sent the ball out to Watson --- and Watson crossed the line right between the posts.

In the second half Australia put on the pressure and scored ~~xxx~~ again --- but some say the try should have been disallowed. What do you say?

Then once again Wells came into the picture --- he sent Pidding over for another try for Australia.

England's captain Williams said it was a good clean game --- what do you say?

But the Cup went to Australia --- whose captain was a man named Churchill.
