

In perfect formation, four Sunderland Flying Boats came out of the clouds above Pembroke Dock in South Wales. This was the end of a flight from Young Sound; and on board, as passengers, was a party of men who have been living in the Arctic Circle for two years. They were the members of the British North Greenland Expedition --- (led by Commander ~~SIMPSON~~ Simpson of the Royal Navy) --- home after their long, scientific vigil. Among the souvenirs they brought back was this fine-looking salmon; and also on the passenger-list were these hardy

~~huskies; who can now pit their powers of endurance against an English summer.~~

huskies;

Brought your macintosh?

This is a brief extract from the films taken by the expedition during their long sojourn on the ice-cap. Most of their ~~at~~ time was spent in parts of Greenland never explored before. And they have brought back valuable information about this land where the ice is ~~about~~ two miles thick.

Sometimes

And ~~these~~ following pictures, taken from our Library, recall how unexpected drama visited the men of the Expedition in 1952; A A plane crashed while delivering their supplies. The crew were all rescued. ~~in~~