

From the first gang, Peter Keenan of Glasgow dictated the way the fight should go when he met John Kelly of Belfast in the Championship Ring at Paisley. Both men had held the Bantamweight title; Keenan lost it to Kelly/at their last encounter.

Round Three. For the first time Keenan sent Kelly down for a short count; but the Irish boy got up and fought back fiercely.

Round Six --- Peter Keenan really began to put on the pressure.

Round Six --- and Kelly went down under a glovestern.

Round Six --- after a count of nine Kelly got up full of courage --- but Keenan came in to finish him off.

And it was still Round Six when, though Kelly got up, Peter Keenan had won on a K.O. ^{Won} The Belt --- and the British Bantamweight Championship.
