

There was a big crowd braving the foul weather when the Duke of Gloucester shook hands with the teams, at the England v Wales Soccer International at Wembley. And in the stands were members of the Spartak team from Moscow --- studying form.

Wales lost the toss and kicked off. It's England in the white shirts, of course, and Wales in dark.

Once again the brilliant veteran Stanley Matthews on the right wing, was outstanding. He organised many attacks on the Welsh goal --- but this, was one that came to nothing.

The first goal was scored by Wales.. After thirty-six minutes, a pass from Allchurch was netted by John Charles.

Then --- disaster for Wales. Sullivan was carried off on a stretcher, after Ray Daniel had gone off with head injuries --- and for some minutes Wales were playing only nine men.

But at half time they still led --- one-nil. In the second half --- with the Welsh team back to strength --- Matthews centred --- and Roy Bentley headed the equaliser

Then --- another Bentley header made it England 2 --- Wales 1.

Then John Charles --- playing a magnificent game, --- scored the equaliser for Wales..... 2 - all

It looked like being a drawn match --- but after a goalmouth scramble, Roy Bentley got his hat-trick..... and England won -- 3 - 2.

Now --- as a matter of public interest --- we take you back to the Arsenal v Spartak match, to show you that much-discussed "might-have-been". Here ^{is} slow motion --- you see how Milton of the Arsenal --- in white shirt --- was brought down by Sedov in the penalty area. Now --- the movie stops --- to ~~sh~~ show the Spartak player --- Sedov --- tackling Milton as he races for the goal. Both players went down --- but the appeal for a penalty was disallowed. The referee awarded an indirect free kick.

look you - indeedovich!
