

The Royal Yacht Britannia coming into harbour at Grenada, brought Princess Margaret a stage further on her tour of the West Indies.

Landing at St George's, Her Royal Highness was welcomed by the Governor of these sunshine islands known as the Windward Islands, ~~St George's, Barbados.~~

And --- this was Sunday morning; so the Princess attended a service of Thanksgiving at St George's Anglican Church.

Smiling faces and waving hands sped the Princess on her way as she returned to the Britannia --- to sail for neighbouring Barbados.

The British landed in Barbados in the year 1605; so naturally enough when the Princess arrived there was a game of cricket going on. It was a five day match between Barbados and British Guiana; and the ground in which it was played is called the Oval.

On the following day there was a garden party at Government House --- the official residence of Sir Robert and Lady Arundel.

Another occasion was a visit to the Maternal Health Centre at Speightstown --- for informal meetings with mothers and babies.

And --- before the departure from Barbados --- the busy round embraced a young people's rally --- with presentations; and a smiling drive through the ranks of cheering children.
