

When Sir Anthony Eden arrived in New York with Foreign Secretary Mr Selwyn Lloyd, he spoke of his pleasure at the prospect of fresh talks with President Eisenhower.

The President was waiting outside the White House to greet his guest, when the British Prime Minister arrived in Washington. Sir Anthony had already made it known that the discussions with the President were not likely to make headlines. They were merely <sup>an</sup> ~~a routine~~ exchange of views, on outstanding world problems. ~~These were the main talks~~ --- one of the main engagements to which Sir Anthony looked forward, was his speech to the American Senate and House of Representatives.
