

A fifteenth-century castle is a home of the past that sets off those of the present and the future at London's Olympia --- where the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester were the principal visitors on the opening day of the Daily Mail Ideal Home Exhibition. The Duchess's eye was attracted first of all by the latest type of gas cooker. On the electrical stands, there was a new kind of fryingpan that not only fries but bakes and roasts as well; but the newest Rank ~~xxxxx~~ starlet, Anne Heywood, liked the ~~six~~ salad-shredding device which will help her to keep her 36 - 24 - 36.

In the house of the future, there was a bewildering selection of forecasts on what your home will possibly look like in twenty years' time; part of the floor becomes your dining-table by control. A nearby section of the Exhibition shows the Vill To-day --- with different types of houses that can be built accommodate different types of bank-balance. This is the type, with extra large windows.

This is the ~~xxxxxxx~~ Sussex cottage type, with sp rooms as a feature. In fact --- as always --- the ex' is packed with lovely things you'd like to have in yo not to mention --- in your garden.
