

Our news cameras in Athens show some of the rioting that broke out in the Greek capital following the news of the deportation of Archbishop Makarios from Cyprus. British property was destroyed by crowds of students and other demonstrators.

Many were injured as the Athens police struggled to lead the city back to law and order.

KNIGHTS IN ARMOUR.

Members of a Surrey walking club put on suits of armour before setting out on the old Roman Road between Cirencester and Bath. They <sup>were found</sup> ~~started~~ to march twenty miles a day, as King Harold's men were said to have marched to the Battle of Hastings. They discovered that ~~it~~ while in 1066 it was a tax on the strength, there was no tax on the wallop.

TOWN HALL CLIMB.

The town of Munich in Germany recently had a visit from Max Telling --- a Berlin daredevil who decided to climb up the outside of the Town Hall. His object was to display the name of one of the candidates in the forthcoming municipal elections. But the Fire Brigade had other ideas, and tried to persuade him to come down. Unfortunately, Max replied by going still higher.

Eventually they <sup>did</sup> persuade him. Later he was arrested by the police, who asked if he could help with their inquiries about some cat-burglaries.

QUEEN IN CORSICA.

~~It~~ The port of Ajaccio, in Corsica, was gay with crowds and bunting when Her Majesty the Queen arrived at the airport for her holiday on board the Royal Yacht.

At the harbour, the Royal visitor was greeted by the Prefect. Princess Alexandra accompanied the Queen on to the ~~launch~~ launch that was to take them out to the Britannia. The Duke of Edinburgh had come ashore to join them, after manoeuvres with the Royal Navy.
