Calling at Hamburg is a mechanical salesman from Britain; it's a Bristol Britannia airliner --- starting a six-day tour of Europe to show itself to prospective buyers in Germany, Sweden and Denmark.

And here --- at Hamamatsu in Japan --- is another British plane for export; a de Havilland Vampire jet, It is being headed over to the newly-created Japanese Air Defence Force.

Now --- on the Home Front --- is a Vickers Valiant; one of the latest recruits to the Royal Air Force. This is the R.A.F. station at Gaydon. ^

The Valiant is designed to carry nuclear weapons. The destructive power of one Valiant, is greater than that of the whole of Bomber Command at peak strength during the last war.
