

The Duke of Edinburgh chatted with aircraft workers when he paid a visit to the Blackburn and General Aircraft Company at Brough in Yorkshire..... ~~makers~~ makers of the largest freight-carrying plane in the world. Among items of interest that the Duke inspected were a model of 1932 --- and another which dates back to 1912, when it had a speed of sixty miles an hour.

Prince Philip's keen interest in flying is well-known --- and when this Blackburn took off for a short flight, the royal visitor was on board. And so was our newsreel ~~cameraman~~ cameraman, who was thus able to take these pictures of the Duke at the pilot's controls.

After a spin of about twenty minutes, the ~~Duke~~ Duke brought the Blackburn in for a perfect landing.

The Trinity House of Kingston upon Hull was another port of call ~~for the Duke~~; ^{The Duke} he unveiled a plaque to commemorate his opening of the renovated navigation school buildings; and spoke to the boys in his own breezy style.
