

The young King Faisal of Iraq was entertained at supper at the Sultan's summer palace when he paid a visit to Morocco. There have been rumours that the real purpose of the royal visit was to arrange a marriage. In eastern countries, they have the fireworks first.

QUEEN MOTHER.

Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother received a bouquet from one of the pupils when she went to the site of the new headquarters of the Royal College of Midwives. Her Majesty then laid the foundation stone of this new London building for a service which began as the Midwives Institute in 1881. The Queen Mother told them that she could imagine no work that was more worth while.

DUKE PLAYS POLO.

On Smith's Lawn at Windsor, the Duke of Edinburgh played back for Windsor Park in a polo match against Cowdray Park.

Queen Elizabeth watched a fast and exciting game which ended in victory for Cowdray Park by five goals to three and a half; and presented the Cup and tankards.

Princess Margaret --- despite a dog with other ideas --- chatted with members of the teams after the match.

ROCKET SLED.

On a plateau a mile high in Utah, U.S.A. --- here's a dummy doing a job of research into safety devices for American airmen. It's an ejector seat --- shooting off down a two-and-a-half mile runway --- to parachute over a thousand-foot cliff.
