

(2). TITLE.:- GLIDING IN SCOTLAND.

Picture.:- Over the border, they've "fallen heavily" for the new sport. No ! that's an unfortunate --

--simile to use about gliding. Let's say rather "they've taken it up."

Lowe Wilde, the aviator, shows how ! A long long pull, and up she goes. They --

--follow in rapid succession, but do not yet attempt to soar for long. Gliders are too expensive to risk having them smashed up by trying to do too much at the first attempt. Necks are valuable too, and the club hasn't got its own mortuary fitted up yet ! That'll come later, perhaps !

Ladies are as keen on it as the men -- and they're every bit as venturesome.

It's a thrill you can't resist once you've tried it.

Here's one who sets out on a "flip", but doesn't rise. Perhaps he thought the instructor said "slide" instead of glide.
